Cap and Gown 1980, vol. 82

THE University of the South. This popular bumper sticker slogan obeys the Honor Code-it does not lie. However, Sewanee, to those who know and love it, is not merely THE University of the South, but, quite simply, THE University.

Admissions and Public Relations personnel have little difficulty in finding appealing adjectives to promote Sewanee-"English traditionalism," "purely liberal arts education," and "individualized instruction." Unfortunately, some or all such descriptive statements might well apply to many small liberal arts colleges. Yet, Sewanee stands alone in its fineness.

What makes Sewanee different? The answers are numerous but the truth is obscure. Sewanee is rooted in traditionalism-academic gowns, Saturday classes, the dress code, Lessons and Carols, two a.m. truck stop raids, party weekends, night study, the fog, and Zachary. Sewanee students are confronted with so many traditions that one may wonder if there is any time left for creativity, innovation, and exploration. The question is easily resolved.

In 1979-80 Sewanee students tried steak-less Wednesdays and probed the pros and cons of a five-day week. The Sewanee Purple became a monthly news magazine instead of a weekly newspaper. Some students spent the summer in Oxford, England under the British Studies Program. Athletes gained recognition as the football team won seven straight while the women's basketball team recorded its first winning season ever. Sewanee talent was exhibited in the play "The Importance of Being Earnest" and the musical "Guys and Dolls." As always, the Lecture Series brought distinguished guests such as Hugh Trevor-Roper while the Concert Series provided a variety of musical entertainment including Dave Brubeck. Certainly, Sewanee is not stagnate when it comes to student affairs and intellectual and cultural opportunities.

Sewanee's goal as an educational institution is to cultivate academic excellence. Its prestigious record of Rhodes Scholars, doctors, lawyers, and successful businessmen and women is evidence of this achievement. However, a Sewanee education provides more than intellectual growth. The environment at Sewanee encourages trust in fellow human beings through the Honor Code. Sewanee stimulates the challenge of ideas through its liberal arts tradition and fosters commitment to those concepts which merit personal value. Opportunities for community involvement in social service programs such as Sewanee's Big Brother/Big Sister organization allow for students to be exposed to the needs of others outside the college circle.

While Sewanee broadens the mind intellectually and helps to shape one's character, it also allows for spiritual exploration and growth. Sewanee was founded by Christian men who saw a need for God's gifts to men to be cultivated and realized through education of the mind. Sewanee's College of Arts and Sciences and Seminary are sources of knowledge and education which enable each student to explore his spiritual questions and needs. Sewanee provides the means by which each student may make his personal choice.

Sewanee stands apart from other educational institutions because it is a place where people are committed to increasing their knowledge and discovering the truth through both traditional and unconventional methods. It is a place where people learn acceptance and respect individualism. A little closer to heaven? Maybe. Sewanee-THE University of the South.

Sewanee Student Life. Probably like campus life on all small, private episcopal campuses nestled in the Cumberland Plateau. Yet, Sewanee stands alone in this category and so does its student life. To be sure, a casual observer might view Sewanee's frat parties, social clubs, and sporting events as quite the "norm" as far as college activities go. But, a closer look will reveal a campus lifestyle which thrives on tradition without being stale, which encourages individuality without creating separateness, and which is, in the end, distinctly a Sewanee style all its own.

Student Life at Sewanee consists of a variety of campus happenings and other more individual activities. Where else can you jog down to the lake on a steamy afternoon in late August after emerging from three hours of Saturday morning classes? Such an excursion might happen you onto a small gathering around a keg or a group of frisbee fanatics showing off the latest marvels of the popular plastic disc.

A September Saturday afternoon will find most sports enthusiasts (of all descriptions) out at the football field awaiting—not the arrival of the football team—but the ceremonious procession of the drinking clubs.

Of course, you can't talk about the Sewanee "Fall Season" without mentioning the infamous Homecoming Party Weekend. With Friday beginning on Wednesday afternoon, this import attraction of the year is a string of live bands, informal breakfasts, coat and tie gatherings and so on. Smalltown Sewanee nightlife becomes, perhaps, a big-time affair—if only for a few days.

Student life at Sewanee is obviously unique, but, it's also more than the aforementioned social occurrences. Sewanee student life is students dining with professors and visiting the Vice-Chancellor when the porch light is on. It's standing in All Saint's and feeling the chills go up your spine as you witness Convocation for the first, second, or umpteenth time. And, later, it's being in that same place as you experience the majesty of the Festival of Lessons and Carols.

Sewanee life is those time and energy consuming finals and the endless nights spent in spooky Walsh-Ellett. But, there's always the consoling call of Gailor snack treats.

However good it is to return to Sewanee after a relaxing holiday, February rarely seems appealing. Yet, even with the fog and the continous white stuff falling from the sky, Sewanee students find "life" in fireside conversations and an occasional spirited basketball game. But, spring can't come quickly enough and it's always exiciting to find the first flower along the Abbo's Alley trek. Of course, seniors rarely notice the foliage since they are so caught in in some threatening phenomenon known as comps. Everyone, however, usually takes a break for Spring Party Weekend and other indulgences such as softball, bike rides, and canoe or rafting trips.

Happily or not, the year passes all too quickly. Events of major and minor importance all become but memories. And, it is, once again, when we stand in All Saint's at the final commencement ceremony, that we truly realize and appreciate our Sewanee Student Life.

But When You Come Back ...

Sewanee Siblings

The Sewanee year might be characterized by a habitual reliance on numbers. While many of us here claim to be self-reliant, from professors down to each of us as we entered as freshmen, the fact cannot be denied that everyone consciously or subconsciously depends on knowing what number of classes are left in the semester, whether it is a Monday of the MWF sequence or a Thursday of the TTS series of classes, in which number and section of freshman english one is registered, and exactly how many words long it was that that professor assigned the essay to be.

Imagine back to one's first chaotic days here on the Mountain. Besides wandering to and from Gailor, wishing for the bare requirements necessary for subsistence (consider how freshmen would prosper had the Scarsdale diet plan been implemented during the first week of school) and besides weighing that most heavy of early decisions of which side of Gailor to seat oneself without becoming tainted for life, and besides which fraternity party to attend, there were just too many disconcerting aspects of Sewanee life to deal with without becoming messed up in a numbers game.

As I remember it, the initial shock was the ominous and everpresent Saturday class. "Sure," we all said, as we woke up that first Saturday morning and threw a tie around our necks before tromping off to an 8 o'clock, "no problem." Just because all of our friends at civilized schools are sleeping off hangovers through the weekend, it is no reason to see the Deans just yet about transferring. I mean, really, there are only thirty eight meetings of that particular class left.

From those early classes, we slipped into the daily trek to the B.C., feeling some appreciation for those dogs of Pavlov as we tried to remember our S.P.O. box numbers and whether it was GH to the left or right for two revolutions, not to mention wondering just what the heck S.P.O. stood for. The cute freshman guy or girl who was seeming to develop a similar feeding schedule at the Snack Bar was inconsequential during these early days while fighting for mere survival.

English 101, ye gads, the first course and it labeled with the next to the lowest possible three digit number. 400 level courses at the time were on an altogether unfathomable plateau. They had told us in the Admissions Office that no one here had a computer number in lieu of a formal name on file, so we at least retained some self-sovereignty in this computer age with the only question being how long this "old" luxury might last.

And then, hardly had a daily routine of class, napping, jogging, dinner, and a tour through the library to socialize before finally settling in to an evening in the Pub, did friendly Dr. so and so assign that first essay, "to be not less than six pages, typed, and handed in by class time next Saturday." Six pages was soon deciphered to mean 250 words a page, and now we had it, in black and white, a task of scratching out 1200 words, and probably not one too many. Subsequentially, this meant a radical altering of routine and learning the somber buzzing of the overhead neon lights within the bowels of DuPont Library. Some of those words proved hard to come by, but inevitably everyone produced some effort, however feeble the Prof thought it was.

The habit of not handing in a paper until it was at least a week and a half late was not acquired until one's sophomore year. For it was during the sophomore slump that the true cynicism developed, stemming from the fact that one had only 90 hours left in order to graduate. Quality points were deemed to be entirely unnecessary and equally non-understandable. By the junior year and even the senior year, for that matter, it remained terribly disconcerting to be still enrolled in certain 101 courses trying to round out the distribution requirements.

And even here, in the annual, rests the final indication of the significance of the numbers on our lives at Sewanee. This particular assignment, for example, was for approximately 728 words, and in fact it took precedence over all papers trying to produce some facsimile of approximately 728 words.

Woods Lab . . . selva oscura? "Abandon every hope ye that enter." What do they do in there, day and night? Brewing microorganisms, organic chemicals, plans for grad school, med school? For the answers to these and other questions tune in, or better yet . . . tune out? To those who seldom find occasion to visit Woods Lab, some of these myths may seem believable but more likely are dismissed with a disdainful wave of the hand and a sigh of relief that, "I don't have to spend all my time in there!" To those who do enter the deep dark depths myth making may suit their purposes all the better. There is no doubt that "across the parking lot" has connotations far beyond the geographical. Intimidation and superiority (inferiority) complexes are common to both sides of the great divide. The separation of the kingdom of arts and sciences into two often warring factions is an old one. But, "to each his own" does not include a judgement of whose pursuits are nobler, more difficult, or more worthwhile. It means loosely in the 60's lingo, "whatever turns you on," and that is what counts. A healthy respect for what we are about here, for our differences as well as the things we share is an integral part of a liberal education at Sewanee.

Ode to Woods Lab

O Goddess of inspiration and of light
Call upon us in the dark hours of the night
Abandon not these hallowed halls
Though curses resound against these walls.
Keep us faithful to thy scientific thought—
Though gravity pulls we answer not,
Through the long late hours we fight,
Through sleepless masses, to remain upright.
Give us strength and wisdom to fill the mighty void of sense
That across the way grows larger still and calls for recompense.

Tis difficult to argue what is up and what is down

For a physicist could convince you the world is not round.

The mystery of what keeps this planet spinning

May seem our end but it is only his beginning.

Forces, fields, and vectors give our lives magnitude and direction;

The beauty of a spring rain is explained by atmospheric convection.

Is there nothing sacred in the laws of thermodynamics?

Even a child at play is part of entropy's disorderly antics!

His solutions, equations, and theories may often seem a bit pat,

But why question, when in your heart you know it's flat?

In looking for a simple solution the chemist is not the one to seek; He'll calculate, titrate, dilute, and then tell you his solutions's weak. He dreams of writing the Great Organic Epic but doesn't have the time. For his forte is confusing, not elucidating, his theoretical rhyme. Yet there is something noble in seeking what cannot be seen; Molecular structures are creations of a chaotic chemical scene. He wields a fearful reputation and an image few would seek; Misanthropic, unreasonable, unfeeling, and of chemicals he doth reek. But when all is said and done he may indeed have the last say, For he can make TriNitroToluene, an argument that holds great sway.

The biologist's task is simple, to study all living things; In every syllable he speaks the gospel of Darwin rings. Armed with compound microscope he delivers his profound prognosis On the important differences between meisos and mitosis. Such revelation comes slowly but all worthwhile things do; "Trees weren't made in a day," he says, "and neither were you." He shuns the teleological, the anthropomorphic tone,

But talks of the personal language that cells speak to their own. He makes it perfectly clear that our bodies are not ours alone, But are rented out for the purpose of giving microorganisms a home. As the sun sets in the west, the lights of Woods begin to shine; The madness begins again, the search for truth divine. Upstairs the mathematicians continue Pythagoras' trade. Downstairs psychologists anxiously wait for rats to run the maze. Throughout the building sighs and moans ring clear, No doubt the pre-meds believe the day of reckoning grows near. Organic panic, micro mania, math anxiety fill the hours— Chemists titrate, philosophers meditate, botanists dissect flowers. Soon the sun will rise and the madness seem to cease But in the dark wood sanity hath all too short a lease.

In the beginning was the choir. It performed for daily services at which there was mandatory attendance for all students, it performed for the Festival of Lessons and Carols which began in 1959, and every year, it would combine with the choir from an all-girl school and give a concert. The choir has continued as an arm of the chapel and as the best co-ed fraternity on the campus.

After that, there was the band. Sewanee needed a band for official occasions like football and basketball games. It was discovered that some of the students had played this and that in high school and so a group was amassed: the great University Stationary Marching Band.

And they were good.

What more could the University need? Well, what about all of those frustrated guitar players since the age of The Pelvis and Buddy Holly? There have been the bands, in most recent memory The Vegetables and there have been the lone Dylan and Denver hybrids who sing for Sewanee Arts at the Outside Inn.

They were good, too.

Sewanee has always had drama which is attested to in those now silly photographs of undergraduates in pseudo-Grecian garb from the early days. But drama and music have always been comfortable and sometimes necessary bedfellows. We have had a production of A Midsummer Night's Dream with the masque music written for it by Purcell. And then there is that delightful French froth Lully wrote for Moliere. True, most people don't know that Moliere has music; but we did, and did it. And of course all of that is to say nothing of out and out musicals we've seen, like The Three Penny Opera and Guys and Dolls. Who performs the music? Students. Volunteers, Both as musicians and as directors.

But there has been in-put as well. The concert series brings classical performers every year from the world over. Of recent memory has been the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra, The Cleveland Quartet, Jean-Pierre Rampal, and Eugene Fodor. The Jazz Society brings its brand of music, too. They collaborated on the Dave Brubeck and the Preservation Hall Jazz Band. And the Guild of St. Cecilia. Contrary to popular opinion it is not a Tuesday crocheting circle but a group of student performers who give classical recitals and sponsor visiting young talent from other schools.

That is seven. Is it enough? Apparently not. From time to time the talent gets together and produces a Cabaret of popular and theater music. There is the Sewanee Chorale for singers in the community who also participate in the Festival of Lessons and Carols and have a Spring Concert as well. There is the Colloquium Canticum, a group of students who perform madrigals and have made special programs in two successive years for the Mediaeval Colloquium. There is also the strong right arm of the University Band, The Jazz Band, which appears at the Tara Seeley Party Weekend Dances and other functions. Fraternities regularly import popular talent. And finally, there are several student and faculty recitals every year.

Finally? Probably not. People love music. They love to perform it and they love to attend performances of it. They love to have it on their radios in the morning, in their chapel services, at their parties on records, at their pubs, whether Tiger Bay or the Outside Inn. They love it whenever it was written and however it is performed.

When I first came to visit Sewanee, three years ago, I was told in the midst of my interview that "at Sewanee, we believe that anyone can sing and that music, therefore is not a valid academic exercise." Since then, the music department has grown and come to include a voice instructor. It has raised itself in dignity among the university departments and is producing skilled musicians in both the art and the craft of music. Music is alive here. Sewanee is a place where it can live and grow.

The Sewanee Student Christian Fellowship has but one purpose, to know God and to make Him known. This simple premise is the foundation for our Wednesday night meetings and our dormitory Bible studies. The SSCF consists of some members involved in the weekly large group meeting or in one of the Bible studies that meet weekly in almost every dormitory.

This year Fellowship has strived to grow and improve in its ministry to the campus and to ourselves. The speakers at our Wednesday night meeting have been one of the greatest assets. The speakers have included University professors, missionaries, members of national movements for the alleviation of hunger, members of Sewanee's chaplaincy, the Vice-Chancellor, and the Director of Nuclear Research at Oak Ridge.

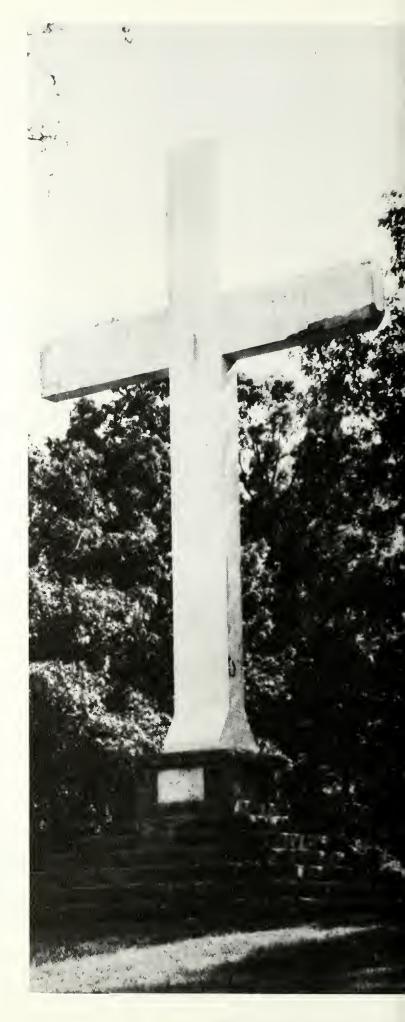

Among other activities sponsored by the Fellowship have been a dance with music by the Sewanee Jazz Band, a square dance with a professional caller, and various attempted (but mostly rained-out) hayrides, picnics, and trips. Some of the more successful trips have been to Inter-Varsity conferences. Inter-Varsity is an international Campus Christian Organization—one of whose staff members, Paul Renfroe, visits us weekly to help our leaders plan and organize. About a dozen Fellowship members spent five days during Christmas vacation in Urbana, Illinois at a conference called Urbana '79. Around 17,000 students from all over the United States and the world attended this conference in order to learn more about missions and mission work.

Another very important part of the Fellowship is music. We have been blessed with several very talented musicians through whose music Fellowship members are able to experience a very special kind of worship. We also publish a bimonthly newsletter entitled "Harvest" which is distributed to students and sent to alumni and others with an interest in the Fellowship.

Our Fellowship is more than just a bunch of Jesus freaks, pentacostals, or evangelicals. We may be that, but mainly we want to provide a place and a time for students to come together to get to know each other and God better. We are not always successful but I believe our motives are the best.

These few verses I think sum up what the "Fellowship" is all about:

... what we have seen and heard we proclaim to you also, that you also may have fellowship with us; and indeed our fellowship is with the Father, and with His son Jesus Christ ... And this is the message we have heard from Him and announce to you, that God is light, and in him there is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with Him and yet walk in the darkness, we lie and do not practice the truth; but if we walk in the light as He Himself is in the light, we have fellowship with one another, and the blood of Jesus His Son cleanses us from all sin. I John 1:3,5-7

Three girls huddled in the corner of the pub, paralyzed, unable to mingle with the just-back-from-Christmas-break crowd. One whispered in a panicked tone to the others, "I don't know what to say to these people."

What distinguished these three from the crowd around them was that they had chosen for reasons incomprehensible to most of those around them, to leave, for a semester or even a year, the mountain paradise of Sewanee. The process of re-adjustment to this self-contained world subjects the prodigal son (or daughter) to various indignities. Freshmen ask you if you are a transfer, or worse, if you go to the Academy. Professors wonder if you are a returning alum or ask you, though you are a junior, how your comps went.

Sewanee operates on the basis of assumptions and intimacies so that if you are not bound up, even periferally, in the communion of life here, your return is that of a stranger to a strange land. What is deceptive is the familiarity of surroundings—little things like the bell of Breslin Tower running five minutes slower than any other clock on campus, or the persistent stale smell of mildew and cigarettes in night study.

The prodigal, who has usually spent his exile in a distant booming metropolis, finds himself yearning for Mac-Donald's or more than one movie in town. If he has returned from foreign parts of culture and refinement, he winces at Sewanee audiences applauding before the end of a movement or the average student's failure to imitate the British pronounciation of Van Gogh.

Sewanee is not hostile to the prodigal. It is simply that Sewanee's charm of being a self-contained world is what makes re-entry so difficult. Yet you always have Sewanee; Sewanee is what Robert Frost wrote of home as "the place when you have to go there, they have to take you in."

Sewanee Siblings

Sewanee Students Get Involved ...

... In Community Affairs

Opportunities for community involvement and outreach are endless at Sewanee. Much has been made of the towngown split but much has been done by University students to bridge this gap.

The Christian Social Relations Board (CSR) was formed last year to determine community needs and to establish a network by which students can help meet these needs. Eighty University students participate in the CSR's Big Brother-Big Sister Program, and spend an hour or more each week with their "little brothers" or "sisters," who are Franklin County elementary school children.

The students who participate in the Board's Senior Citizen Visitation Program also donate an hour of their time weekly to the community's elderly population. In May, the students honored their friends with a senior citizen luncheon, featuring a talk on "Sewanee Stories That Aren't True," by Mrs. Chitty. Also, in November, 500 Sewanee students fasted for all or part of a day and Gailor contributed their meal money to the Bread for the World Organization. CSR's World Community Program sponsored this Demonstration, and also organized lectures on Military Service and Conscientious Objection.

The newest of the Board's programs is the Community Chemical Dependency Team. The Team offers counseling, support groups and clinic referral to Sewanee students and community members.

This year Sewanee students have sought to encourage an energy and resource conservation ethic within the community. In October, a group of students united to organize the Sewanee Recycling Center. They leased a fire-gutted building from the University and with the help of other students and community members, raised a roof and a wall on the building. Between October and May, the community has deposited over 14 tons of paper, glass and aluminium at the center.

The group made a cost-benefit analysis of the Center and proved that it was a profit-making business. By mobilizing support from the OG, SA, Executive Committee, trustees, regents, faculty and community, they persuaded the University administration to take over the operation of the Recycling Center to insure its continued existence.

Many of the students who organized the Recycling Center are members of the Sewanee Environmental Group, which also benefits from faculty and community membership. This group has been involved in monitoring the now abandoned strip mine at Jump Off, lobbying for the passage of the Tennessee Bottle Bill and exploring ways to control the Sewanee litter problem. This Spring the group celebrated Earth Day by sponsoring an Environmental Careers Symposium, where students from the University and local high schools attended lectures by environmental professionals in law, journalism, engineering, forestry, land use planning and geology.

The list is long: the Student Volunteer Fire Department, the Emergency Medical Team, campus social organizations; all contribute to the community's welfare. A large number of students participate in "Help Day"—an annual effort to clean up Sewanee. Those students who take the time and accept the responsibility for community involvement leave behind as much as they take from this mountain.

Seniors

A college senior probably has mixed feelings toward that position. While I am looking forward to the challenge of the real world, the idea of leaving a place as beautiful as Sewanee is disheartening. There are many things to keep one from studying, so graduating is all the more of an accomplishment. Between late night junkets to the truck stop, the Pub during happy hour, and playing golf amongst kegs of PBR, one's college is only part of his education. It is too bad we have to graduate just as we were getting the hang of registration. And it wasn't until my senior year that I got the dorm room that I wanted. Sewanee may be lacking in hearing about world news but there is enough gossip to keep idle minds working. Privacy will be a new thing to adjust to in post-graduate days. Never winning the Bahamarama raffle or climbing the water tower may be a void in my life, but the friendships, acquaintances, and experiences will last a lifetime.

Juniors

In the middle of the journey of our Sewanee experience, we find ourselves wondering why we've been here for three years ... It's now too late to transfer, but there is much to remember and a lot to wonder about the future. Looking seriously at the transcript now, we wonder if graduate schools will admire the 1.5 from freshman year. But with pass-fail courses and finishing the language requirement we can excel a little more easily now.

Of course, Sewanee has proved to be a unique experience with yet still more to come. After three years of Bahamarama you know that you just have to win the next time, and next semester you will undoubtably make a 4.0.

By now you've memorized the gourmet menu at Gailor and know just when to avoid the good 'ole dining hall and opt for a P&J instead. And, although you often take them for granted, sunsets at Morgan's Steep are still breathtaking.

Whatever Sewanee has already been—the good and the bad, you can't help getting a little sentimental about Graduation—knowing next year it will be you!

Sophomores

Being a sophomore is not so different from being a freshman...you've just had more experience at it. You still have to stay up all night to finish that term paper, but it's no longer an academic trauma. You still love it when it snows, only this time, you're on the roof of Gailor instead of on the ground. After a full year of fraternity parties, you may still not know your limit, but you don't lose at Thumper quite so often.

Yet, there are some moments peculiar to sophomores. Now you have a name for those times when you just don't feel like working; it's called Sophomore Slump. Of course you'd always known you wanted to be a history major ... or English ... or maybe chemistry ... And when you go home for vacation, you're surprised to realize that you kind of miss Sewanee.

Freshman

I had seen Sewanee eight months previously in the fog—thick ubiquitous fog. And then I arrived in the pouring rain one muggy afternoon in August. My first freshman impression: Does the sun ever shine on the Cumberland Plateau? Several weeks later, after a mild bout with a malady they call homesickness, getting used to sharing a 10 x 12 cellblock, acquainting myself with mealtime unidentifiables, and attempting to understand a large group of individuals from the Lone Star State, the sun came out. And with the exception of a few clouds, it has been shining ever since.

The source of light and warmth is Sewanee spirit—spirit that means having a real concern for those around you, a sincere attitude of caring that makes a difference in everyone's life. Sewanee is a sunset at Morgan's Steep, a pitcher in the pub, the ghost in Carnegie, a walk through Abbo's Alley. Sewanee is a common unity, a community of life's treasures.

Life on that mid-fall day at the Bishop's Common was no different from that of any other except for periodic tortured cries that could be heard emanating from the depths of the SPO. The source of those vociferations was faculty members just informed that it was time again for those interminable nightmares euphemistically called "Faculty Meetings." As always, certain members made plans to visit ailing relatives; others remembered financial transactions that had to be closed that would necessitate their absence.

As the bells chimed at 3:45 the next day, the unfortunate and the dedicated, in full academic regalia, filed ceremoniously to the Bishop's Common to begin the afternoon's ordeal. After the meeting was brought to order, followed by the usual motion to adjourn, the Dean brought before the body what he perceived to be the alarming fact that as final exams approached they brought with them a corresponding increase in the use of drugs. Pointing out that the problem was reaching crisis proportions, he proposed that the testing time be shortened, and the percentage that the tests made up of the final grade average be reduced.

The proposal immediately brought a storm of protest from the floor. The chairman of the history department jumped to his feet to assail what he thought to be an outrageous plan. "This institution," he cried, "has a tradition of pushing students beyond their endurance, of driving the best of its pupils to the limits of human physical, mental and emotional capabilities. Why should we foresake such a rich tradition of academically torturing students?"

No sooner had the venerable pundit left his feet when a member of the religion department rose also to score the proposal. Noting that throughout the Bible God's people were called to suffer, he wondered aloud whether easing the exam schedule might be an obstruction of God's will, and thus might be an invitation of God's wrath and fury.

This stirring speech was followed by one from a reverend member of the psychology department. He explained that recent studies among college students showed that they wished to give their lives some cause. Around 76% of all students had subliminal masochistic tendencies waiting to surface in the proper environment. "Why," he asked, "should we remove from Sewanee an academic milieu so conducive to surrender, sacrifice and suffering?"

Closing out the afternoon's debate was a report submitted by the economics department containing a cost/benefit analysis of the proposal. It stated that though the electricity saving from the reduced late night study at Walsh-Elleott would be large if the recommendation was accepted, the drop in the sale of caffeine-related products at the University Supply Store would be disastrous.

A motion was passed to end debate and bring the proposal to a vote. It was defeated by voice vote with only a smattering of yeas among members voting. Though the defeat left the Deans dejected, the message was clear to the rest of the world that Sewanee would not waver in its endeavor to urge students to the peak of their academic capacities.

When a student first comes to Sewanee, he is SPO'd a list of the many organizations the University of the South has to offer its students. Because Sewanee tends to draw its student body from exceptional highschool students—the kind of people who like to be "involved"—most freshmen choose to join one of these organizations. However, choosing to join and joining are two different matters. Some students become members of groups automatically when their GPA's reach a certain point (the Order of Gownsmen, for example). Others are elected by a select group to organizations like Who's Who and Wilkins Scholars. Membership in the student government is determined by the entire student body while membership in the choir, forestry club, and political organizations is strickly voluntary.

Of course the type of group someone joins, or attempts to join, depends on his interests. He may really want to be involved or is just looking for propaganda to write on job and grad school applications. As for interests, the diversity of organizations is great enough for just about anyone to find something he'd like. There are language clubs that do a lot of dancing, singing, and drinking; music organizations that do a lot of singing and drinking; and ribbon societies that do a lot of drinking. We have "major's clubs"-economics and pre-law; "artsy groups"-Purple masque, Jazz Society; "monogram organizations"-SA, OG, DC, ODK, WIDC, IFC, SOC, and HC; "community service groups"-Blue Key, Women's Service League; "religious organizations"-Chapel Council, Sewanee Christian Fellowship; and, "non-religious organizations"-STL, Plastic Spoon, and others that have yet to be categorized.

These groups are one of the most effective means of integrating new students into Sewanee life. You certainly meet a lot of people and often end up doing things you would normally not do (i.e. the initiation into a ribbon society). Some people get into a group with the idea of changing the course of history of that particular group or that of Sewanee as a whole and are often disappointed. Soon after their arrival, students realize that most of the important decisions are made, not by the organization as a whole, but rather by the organization's executive officers—often over a pitcher of beer in the pub. The consumption of these pitchers has often resulted in some very interesting innovations and re-organizations.

The 1979-80 year saw quite a bit of this innovation among organizations. For example, the college had its first woman President of the OG. The SA along with the OG seriously considered the possibility of changing to a five-day week and chose to sponsor a Student Capital Funds Drive that involved a large percentage of the student body. The Honor Council reformed its procedure for reporting and investigating violations of the Honor Code. The Purple changed its layout to a monthly magazine in lieu of the conventional weekly newspaper form. The Chapel was more integrated into student life via its Christian Social Relations Board. The choir, on the other hand, toured everywhere from New Orleans to London. On the whole, it was a very active year for Sewanee's chief sources of activity and involvement—the organizations.

8:00. It couldn't be morning. Game Today, Wish I hadn't been up until 2:00 studying. Coach says to be in bed by 11:00—it's not always possible. Better get up. Class in 10 minutes.

10:00. Pre-game meal. Everyone seems loose. Talking. Coach keeps walking around. Fellow next to me hides his ketchup. Coach says it doesn't settle well. I think it's tradition—ketchup-less meals.

12:00. Need to glance through playbook. 34 Trap 63-Pass . . . Power-sweep . . . could do them in my sleep . . . ! probably do. Better head over to the gym. Wonder if I'll get in today. Got to be confident. Hope the coaches have confidence in me—I love to play.

12:15. Locker room is noisy. Boogie 93 can be a little much. Two pass in the middle. One balances a ball on his toe. Nervous energy. I'm nervous. Nervous for them too. We've been through a lot. Camp Mountainlake—spring-less beds.

1:15. Locker room is quiet now. All are seated. Some look around calmly, elbows on knees; some stare ahead. 34 Trap, 16-Pass, Wedge—plays go through my head. Dad says be ready when your number is called. Hope my number is called—I love to play.

1:30. Warm-ups. Hot today. Not much crowd yet. Most don't come until kick-off. Others until the end of the game.

1:50. Back in locker room. Sweat streams down faces. Guess that's good—sweat out the nervousness. I'm still nervous. Here comes the line coach. He can get pretty emotional. That never did much for me—maybe it helps the others. He's got a big heart. All the coaches do. This time he doesn't say anything.

2:00. Game time. Everyone gathers. Coaches offer encouragement. Senior leads us on the field. Hands raised, he bursts through banner. He always did that well—won't be the same without him.

Second Quarter. Haven't played yet. Close game. Still 2½ quarters left. Can't help but glance back occasionally. Skirt-clad drinking club member—drink in one hand, girl in the other. Seems more interested in the girl than the game and the drink than the girl. Sewanee crowds. Contagion-yawning. Girls keep brushing back hair. Eyes focus in all directions.

Half-Time. We're behind. Coach says we're holding back. Keep thinking I'd like a chance—I love to play. Coaches leave. Senior speaks. Good pep talk. They don't need a pep talk—just two quarters.

Third Quarter. Still behind. I've yet to play. I'm upset. I pace. Crowd comes to life. I look to see who scored-dog gallops off field.

Fourth Quarter. Still behind. Still haven't played. I pace now behind coach. Maybe he forgot. He stares on field, hands on knees. He doesn't notice me. Crowd comes to life. I look for dog—we've scored.

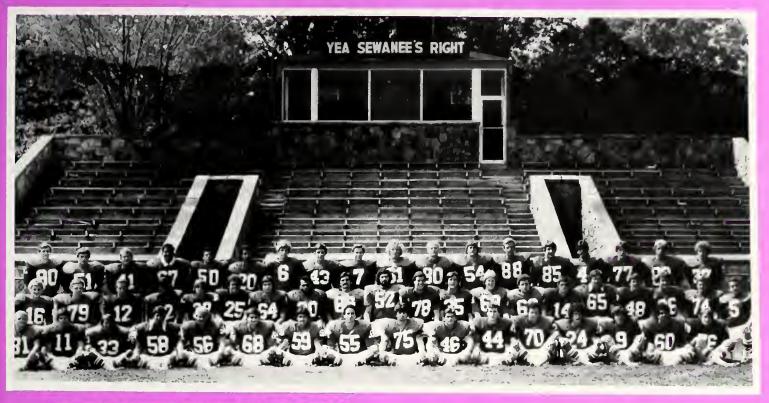

We won. It was close. Liberal Arts—winning tough ones. The battles of life. The struggle of ideas. I never did play. Tears swell. Seems selfish. We won. Can't help it. There's next year. I'll work harder. Hope I don't have to take a position from any of them. They're like me—they love to play.

Ten Years at Sewanee

WOMEN... Ten years they've been here at Sewanee... causing trouble... trying to run things... requiring changes in plumbing, attitudes, politics, social life... adding laughter, color, balance... making a difference.

Sometimes they are defined in terms of their accomplishments ... or categorized by appearance, habitat, friends, reputations ... dismissed as overbearing ugly creatures ... upheld as the saviors of Sewanee ideals ... The truth falls somewhere among inadequate generalizations.

Between a summer-tanned bright-eyed 18 and a thoughtful 21, one discovers many truths at Sewanee ... shouted from jukeboxes in the midnight madness ... thrust from lectures on sleepy mornings ... whispered in the Quadrangle grass on breezy spring days ... but perhaps the greatest are those we see in the eyes and actions of our classmates and friends.

The women I have known at Sewanee supply my definition of what a Sewanee woman is. All different and unique, a combination of her traits is not a person but an explanation ... An explanation of the memories and the ideas I take with me as I leave Sewanee.

I take a dose of tolerance learned from my first roommate, who was into math, kaleidoscopes and The Singing Nun and caused me to be into moving out. We both survived the experience and four Sewanee years by going our separate ways. And Sewanee has been as much hers as it has been mine. The tolerance dose was doubled by my second roommate, who was a Yankee . . . living with me prior to my reconstruction. The war is over but we're still on different sides.

Political savvy I tried to learn from many sources. The "Hunter Jocks" caucus system headed up by a relentless tyrant who knew how to get her girls to the polls ... and shoot basketball. She was equally adept at getting everyone on campus to parties. I know ... I carried the ice for the drinks.

There have been others to learn from ... an Elvis maniac, a suitemate who enquired about my relationships to the very kiss ... a sorority friend ever-dressed in the brightest colors ... quite a few who made great daquiris ... and many who made great friends.

The lesson of sponteneity was taught to me by a pair of friends who packed their suitcases, went to the Bahamarama party—didn't win the trip, but went anyway. And from another, who jumped on my back and made me fall in the mud in front of Gailor (both of us not appropriately dressed). And finally, another who flashed passersby on a float trip down the Hiwassee.

From these people I discovered what a Sewanee woman is.

Congratulations Seniors 1980

From the Staff of the 1980 Cap and Gown

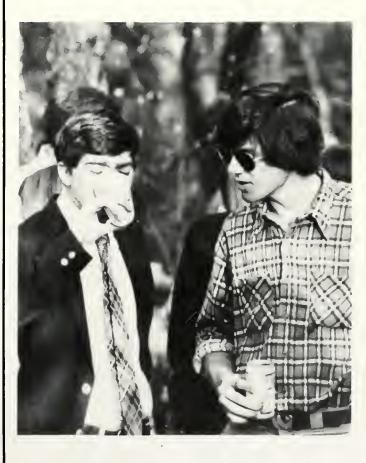

Saga Food Service

Shenanigans and Valley Liquors

Well, here it is—finally, the 1980 Cap and Gown. At times, we felt it would never get done. And, sometimes we just wanted to quit and go home (especially when everyone else was already at home). But, something kept us going—striving not only to reach those horrendous deadlines but to do a good job in the process. Call it self-motivation, Sewanee-inspired spirit—whatever—we think it was a little of both.

Of course we couldn't have done it alone—and we didn't. Some hard-working staff members—especially Jim Mathes, Rob Binkley, Mary Cook, Dawn Adkins, Brian Reinhardt, Edward Wilson, and Jeff Williams—put in long, laboring hours to help bring this book together. And, our advisor, Dean Seiters, was always around to help pay the bills on time. There are many more who offered their support, their talents, and their understanding when things got rough. To all of you we extend our deepest appreciation.

We both think that Sewanee is a very special place and we've both built lots of memories here. We hope the 1980 Cap and Gown will remind you, in years to come, of some of the times and the people here at Sewanee.

Seri Arigap Leach Tendley
